Promising Clues Are Found on Body of Man Who Planted Washington Bomb.

PHILADELPHIA, June 3 .- Somewhere this city is the secret headquarters of the terrorists who planted ten bombs at midnight Monday to usher in the social revolution that literature of "The Anarchist Fighters" says has begun.

The few clues that are obtainable in cities where the explosions occurred point to Philadelphia as the city from which instructions directing the bomb outrages were sent. Department of Jus tice agents and the police are bending every effort toward unearthing all the hiding places of anarchist and Bolshevist sympathizers in this city.

The investigators have at least one tangible clue with which to start the hunt. That is the partial description of the assessin who was blown to pieces in Washington by the bombs which he threw at the home of A. Mitcheil Palmer, United States Attorney General.

This man is known to have boarded a train at the Baltimore and Ohio Station here, which would have taken him

An automobile found abandoned in "These explosions," he said, "were all too clumsy and ineffective to be the work of genuine dynamiters and anarchists. None of them shows the marks of experts. I have the very same suspicion of these explosions as I had with regard to the mail bomb cases. This is a second effort to bring about the repressive measures desired by the reactionaries."

would be no conceivable reason for picking this man's house for an attack. It looks as though whoever threw the explosive had instructions to bomb some other place and simply became confused. Either this or he had reason to dispose of the thing in a hurry, and threw it, not knowing or caring where it struck. I know of no explanation for the bombina gion. "That was a frameup, as was afterward proved," he said.

Algernon Lee insisted that this was the same sort of an attempt by the police to discredit radicalism as was the Mooney case. He insisted that Mooney had been framed to discredit radicalism, and gave it as his opinion that detectives would not hesitate to go even to the lengths of Monday night in an effort to produce the right background for the national repressive legislation which they sought.

"You will notice," he said, "that none of the supposed victims were actually harmed."

Mr. Nurteva in the same strain marvelled that the police could so readily catch an ordinary thief and yet had falled to make any arrests in either of the bomb outrages or to make any progress in their investigations.

A Curther indication that the dead man was Italian is the discovery of an Italian-English dictionary that had been in his possession. In his pockets were found copies of an anarchistic circular, printed on pink paper and headed "Plain Words." Identical circulars were found near the Church of Church of Vice Police Confident He Belonged circular headed "Anarchist Fighters."

Radical Nests Located.

Italian residents of good standing in the southeastern part of the city describe the section as being "full of I. W. W.'s and other radicals," and regard as plausible the theory that somewhere in the district there may be a secret headquarters from which bomboutrages of broad scope are directed. The Washington police are searching for the hands of the dead man in order that finger prints might be taken. Difficulty has been had in getting a good description because of the badly mutilated condition of the body. From what has been found, however, he is described as having been slender, swarthy and dark complexioned, wearing a black suit with green stripes, a white shirt and dark complexioned, wearing a black suit with green stripes, a white shirt with green and yellow stripes, winter underclothing and socks of tan lisie. His collar, bearing a laundry mark which might be of use in making the identification, has also been found.

The city detectives have wired the Washington authorities for full and quick information in order that the identification might be made with the least possible delay. Identification of this man, it is believed, will lead to a discovery of the entire group.
